

I have owned a large screen HD monitor (projection) for several years... It is old enough that the HD Inputs are component video, and I already am having a difficult enough time in locating a 1080i HD-receiver. With mandated copy-protection standards, I will have to replace this rather expensive item in order to receive HD broadcasts as the availability in the area increases enough to warrant the purchase of an HD-receiver. These shifting standards and mandated incompatibilities to existing hardware only serve to insure that I do NOT buy in to HDTV, even if it means not watching TV at all.
